USO ON THE JOB

Away back there in what now seems to have been another era when the theory of United Service Organizations was being explained, it sounded like a good idea. The theory finally became the fact, and the fact was applied to the gigantic project of taking care of the recreational needs of a mammoth Army and Navy.

USO now is observing its third anniversary. The job it was created to perform is being performed all over the world. Perhaps the quality varies widely, perhaps there are omissions and no doubt there is plenty of room for improvement. But, parallel with the growth of the armed services, USO has been reaching out, doing more, extending its services and on its third anniversary the 800,000 volunteer workers who have kept it going can claim that they have come up to expectations. Their work isn't done, indeed it must seem to them that it has barely been begun, but their conscientious efforts have won the gratitude and approval of millions and will win the praise of millions more before they take a deep breath one day and say, "Well, that's that. We hope we satisfied."

CALLING CARDS ON PARAMUSHIRO

Without pretending to know whether the navy had anything in mind more serious than the blow to Japanese morale when it dispatched a task force to shell Paramushiro, most Americans will settle for that effect alone.

They do not anticipate any greater results than those which followed the Doolittle bombing raid on Tokyo and other targets on the Japanese mainland—but those results were excellent. Like the shelling of Paramushiro, the Doolittle raid signified to more Japanese than could be reached in any other way that their war lords have matched them with an enemy determined to carry the war into the midst of their home land.

The Japanese, up to this point, have been sure of themselves, sure of their leadership, sure of their strategy, too sure. Almost as systematic as the Germans, they had figured out every eventuality in the war they sought, except the eventuality that their arrogance would tempt them to under-rate the enemy. That probably is their blind spot; it always has been Germany's downfall.

The calling cards the United States navy left on Paramushiro in a bold and unexpected visit, the sudden reduction of the Marshalls from a Japanese bastion to a pile of rubble, the shattering of Rabaul—and the certainty that these bold strokes will be followed by others even bolder—will have an effect on the Japanese where they are least prepared for it. Each incident tells the Japanese people plainly that they and their military leaders are losing face with the people they hoped to impress with their muscle flexing.

IN ORDER OF IMPORTANCE

Rep. Raulph Compton of Connecticut probably has performed more distinguished service than most of his colleagues debating the ins and outs of soldier voting by reminding them that the issue can't hold a candle among soldiers, themselves, to the possibility that Postmaster General Walker may keep them from getting their quota of Varga girls.

The representative says his mail gives the Varga girl question seven to one over ballots and 14 to 1 over a national service act. As a soldier of the first World war, he finds no mystery in this. Pin-up girls, he explains, are a symbol of homesickness. They represent what fighting men want to come back to and what they regret having left behind them.

There are, no doubt, some soldiers and sailors who ponder the fact they won't be able to go to the polls in November and become preoccupied with thoughts of casting a free and untrammelled Australian ballot. There probably are some soldiers who would rather have a full ballot, or perhaps even a chance to vote in the primary, than a whole trunkful of the smoothest pin-up girls in circulation, with a box of cookies and home-made candy thrown in as a bonus. There even may be some soldiers who do not detect a whiff in the roaring words of congressmen about the importance of ballots to their dear constituents so far from home, but chances are that Rep. Compton is right. The Varga girl issue raised by Postmaster Walker is worrying our fighting men more than the great question of getting the kind of ballots in their hands that will be most useful to the candidates running for office next November.

DIPLOMATIC INITIATIVE

Since the conference at Teheran early in December, after which President Roosevelt, Prime Minister Churchill and Premier Stalin said they had reached complete agreement on prosecution of the war and the desirability of lasting peace among democratic nations, Russia has held the diplomatic initiative.

Its pact with Czechoslovakia, its exploitation of a rumor about Britain conferring with Germany, its castigation of Wendell Wilkie for what was intended to be friendly comment, its attitude toward Poland and the Vatican and, most recently, its surprise move giving nominal autonomy over diplomacy and defense to its constituent republics have kept London and Washington off balance.

There is no immediate prospect that they will get back on balance, for the sound reason that Russia's diplomatic initiative stems from its possession at the moment of preponderant prestige. Every nation in Europe must be concerned at this time with the problem of orienting its position relative to Russia. The struggle in Spain, which the Allies are trying to force out of the Axis orbit, the uncertainty in Finland where Russia seems inclined to reopen hostilities, the perplexity in Sweden over that country's neutrality prospects, the search for a "better ole" in the Balkans, the friction over civil administration in Mediterranean areas recovered from German domination all stem more or less directly from Russia's ascendent influence.

In this country President Roosevelt never has revealed exactly what understandings were reached at Teheran, but events suggests that whatever meeting of minds may have occurred on other matters Premier Stalin did not promise to pull his punches in the battle for influence. Events even suggest that under the circumstances the possibility wasn't even mentioned because it was too obviously ridiculous to expect that Russia would forego a chance to exercise some of the prestige it never had under former arrangements.

CONTINUED high tension and ambitious purpose and objectives are indicated by the predominant astral interventions, particularly where fresh, exceptional and unforeseen opportunities present. These may be reorganized, revamped or possibly drastically changed with important help from cooperative sources either business, financial, public or private. Quick and aggressive action may be needed with audacious new tactics or systems, ready to jump into a breach, but do not go to excessive or rash heights. Be conservative, but bold and resourceful, and shun wild ventures and risks.

If It Is Your Birthday

Those whose birthday it is may anticipate important openings for making definite progress and the accomplishment of many desired objectives, mainly by means of new, untried, unusual or novel methods or constructive ideas of a practical but radical aspect. Originality and innovations count and entirely reorganizing or changing current situations may be demanded. But be guided by dependable suggestions or counsel of those of experience and insight and not by personal force. Public support may be needed for promotion of brilliant plans or purpose. Seek such with amiability and tact.

A child born on this day may be energetic, ingenious, original and independent in thought and action, but may gain by assistance of those more shrewd and conservative.

Questions About Teeth

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

TODAY I am going to answer questions often asked about teeth. Which is better, toothpaste or powder? No real difference. Individual preference determines the choice.

Dr. Clendening will answer questions of general interest only, and then only through his column.

They are the same except for the material added to the powder to make it into paste.

Can you make your own tooth powder? Yes—one part finely pulverized table salt, and three parts of baking soda.

Does chewing gum help or harm the teeth? There is no scientific evidence that the exercise helps the teeth or stimulates the gums. The sugar in chewing gum may contribute to dental decay.

Should one of the primary or temporary teeth be removed when it appears there will not be room for the permanent set? Not as a rule. Because the primary teeth are smaller than the permanent teeth and their presence stimulates the jaw to grow and make room for the permanent teeth.

What should be done if the (permanent) central incisor tooth of an 8-year-old child is broken accidentally? Fractured teeth are an individual problem. Each case must be worked out by the dentist himself. Usually when no protection is given to the fractured tooth the pulp dies and the tooth may have to be removed. Sometimes it is only necessary for the dentist to smooth the rough edges of the tooth.

What should be done about a wide space between the two front teeth of an 8- or 9-year-old child? Usually nothing need be done because the other permanent teeth as they appear tend to push the central teeth together.

What should be done about the sawedge on newly erupted incisor teeth? When these teeth are in proper position the pointed cusps begin to wear and the normal smooth edge is left.

Should X-ray be taken of children's teeth? Yes, as often or even more often than an adult's in order to discover disease conditions and to follow up the development of the tooth germ.

Also X-ray of a child's mouth will show whether the permanent teeth are in proper position. X-ray will also show whether any supernumerary teeth are present.

If the primary teeth are poor will the second ones also be bad? Not necessarily. The second teeth are formed when the baby is born. If the child has an adequate diet with a proper allowance of calcium after birth, these teeth should be well formed.

At what age should a child start using a tooth brush? As soon as all the primary teeth have erupted, which is about two to two and a half years of age and the parent will do most of the brushing for a time. It is a good idea to let the child brush its own teeth, the parent going over them afterwards. Thus the child is forming the habit of regular teeth brushing while the parent is doing the actual cleaning.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS
W. H. M.—We have been using saccharin for sweetening. I know it has no nutritional value, but is it dangerous to health?

Answer—No, it can be taken in any quantity.

EDITOR'S NOTE: Dr. Clendening has seven pamphlets which can be obtained by readers. Each pamphlet sells for 10 cents. For any one pamphlet desired, send 10 cents in coin, and a self-addressed envelope stamped with a three-cent stamp, to Dr. Logan Clendening, 235 E. 45th st., New York.

College President Rivals First Lady In Activities

BANGOR, Me.—Eighty-one-year-old former president Mary Emma Woolley of Mt. Holyoke college is giving Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt a run for her money as busiest traveling woman in the country.

Here's a typical day in Dr. Woolley's life:

She arrived here after midnight, breakfasted early, attended a series of morning campaign meetings and lunched with fellow workers. She gave a one-hour address at an afternoon mass meeting. After dining with consultants, she delivered a completely new 50-minute address at a second mass meeting, and then caught a 1 a. m. train for her next engagement.

Tell Steve you cashed your War Bond

He got his new legs yesterday.
This morning, just about the time you were cashing that War Bond, he was trying them out on the hospital porch. His steps weren't as brisk as yours.

What's the idea—trying to make you ashamed?
Yes.
And more than that . . . trying to make you understand.

When you cash any War Bond now, you pull your money out of the fight. You make deserters out of your dollars—a coward out of your cash. You refuse to let your money help give millions of Steves the things they need to stay safe—win fast—come home soon. You want others to win your war.

Steve would like his own legs back.
But he's not asking for his money back. Soldiers aren't cashing their War Bonds.

THE LITTLE DOG BARKED by ANNE ROWE

CHAPTER NINETEEN

Linwood threw a cursory glance at the rough sketch the Inspector held out to him. "It's near enough. And my house would be there," he pointed with an elegant finger.

"Oh—there!" Inspector Pettengill made astonished noises with his tongue. "But—that's no farther from the old inn than—quarter of a mile, maybe. I thought you told Mrs. Turner you hadn't been near a mile to it!"

A figure of speech of course. "Dear Inspector, have you called me here to—amuse Mrs. Turner?" Linwood flared up.

"No. No. Just to see would you help me." The Inspector leaned back and started rocking again. "For a friendly chat. They ain't no police stenographer—that comes tomorrow—tonight—if you know something, or think you do, might as well say it. I'd appreciate you saying it. Tomorrow I make you say it."

"I can't make me tell you anything I don't know," Linwood said defiantly, but his face was drawn and he was shaking. "I can't prevent you from thinking what you choose, but any interaction you wish on Mrs. Turner's mostly imagined wrongs. But I say the death of this old handyman was a deplorable coincidence, without the slightest connection with the theatre or Mrs. Turner."

"About the cut rope and the telephone booth—" The inevitable shrug completing the speech was, this time, accompanied by eloquently spread hands. "Aah—meaning you got no idea." Inspector nodded and rose to his feet. "We'll, thanks for coming anyway. Rehearsal starts nine, did you say? Good! I want you and all your actor's on the stage at eight. An hour's plenty for the few questions I aim to ask."

"Good right, Mr. Linwood. Think overnight of what time you get to the theatre, where you sheltered from the storm, and when you got home. Maybe your wife can help you out."

"Poorest liar I ever seen," was the Inspector's verdict when Linwood had gone. "Now why don't you take a leaf outen your book, and tell the truth?"

People certainly were early risers. Fern Cove. When Linda and I went over to the theatre the next morning, on the dot of eight, everyone else was there ahead of us. The whole cast, Linwood included, was lined up on the stage, waiting for Inspector Pettengill to finish a low-voiced talk with Wells Colby. Sheriff Weymouth was there, too, and two men I hadn't seen before. One, tall and burly, with a police's written all over him, turned out to be the Inspector's assistant, Sergeant Hatch of Clifton.

Other, almost a boy, very intelligent looking and scribbling in a notebook furiously, was plainly the stenographer.

The Inspector had his back turned to the footlights, but Colby, who was facing them, must have told him of our arrival, for he turned and greeted us jovially.

"Good morning, Mrs. Turner. That Miss Barolle with you?" "I came to meet you, Miss Barolle. And you escaped with a whole skin yesterday. Come up here, please, and stand where you stood when the bomb fell."

Then he addressed everyone present in general. "I can't aim to waste your time, or mine, with a lot of questions of what you done, or thought, or ett yesterday. Sergeant Hatch here will do that for me. And Mr. Hallet, my stenographer, will take down your depositions. At your convenience; in between practice for Mrs. Turner's play. Can't do, can't it, Mr. Linwood?"

The director shrugged ungraciously. "Why not? They might as well disturb me talking to the police as gossiping among themselves. Good!" The Inspector ignored rudeness of the answer. "And I want to see what happened. All but the booth dropping and the dog barking. Please, all of you stand the same places and do the same things you done that time."

Being about where I'd been the previous day, I stayed where I was and watched the groups forming on the stage, in replica of yesterday's positions. Presently everyone was in place. Even Linwood was straddling his chair again. And the center group was rehearsing the quarrel scene boisterously. Soudra screaming at Orne with clawing fingers and angrily drumming feet. Orne Paulsen trying to out-shout her. Colby and Ione Welland doing their noisy best to calm the antagonists. And Paulsen ending the uproar with a yelled "Shut up!" accented by a forceful stamp of his foot.

This last crude manifestation of temper seemed to interest the Inspector most. He kept glancing at Paulsen's — and Soudra's—moving feet, and from them along the floor to the right, and up into the flies.

Following his eyes with mine, it wasn't hard to follow his reasoning also. The wide floorboard, on which the positions of the two players were chalked, ran clear across the stage and ended under the winch, from which a fresh rope stretched diagonally to the new edition of the telephone booth. And each time Soudra started her tantrum, or Paulsen's foot came down, the winch shook visibly.

If the rope had been cut to the last strand that would support the weight of the booth, repeated jarring would snap it.

"That'll do," The Inspector stopped the rehearsal and walked over to the four actors. "You sure you been standing on the same spot yesterday?"

"Absolutely sure," Paulsen answered for the others. "You can still see the marks, Inspector."

"But I'm not sure," Linwood jumped up from his chair and bent over the marks. "Or rather, I am. The marks aren't quite where I put them."

"But you acknowledge you made 'em, in the first place?" Inspector Pettengill asked evenly.

"Of course I do. I said so yesterday. And I also said Miss Barolle wasn't standing on my mark. There suddenly were two. I'll show you, Inspector," Linwood blustered.

But there was nothing to show. Last night's performance, with its many scene shifts, had obliterated the debated second cross.

"No use trying to find clues on this here stage, with everything tropped over and wiped off. Not that I blame you people for wanting to give your show, or the sheriff for letting you, but—it's made it that much harder," the Inspector said resignedly.

"If I was you, Mr. Linwood, I'd make new marks—other places. Take a look: the way your actors stand now—both on the same floorboard—the winch gets a jar each time they stomp their feet. And with the rope cut the way it was, we'll—draw your own conclusions."

Linwood looked stunned. "I didn't know. I'm sorry. I—shall look into it."

"Okay. You find out who set the dog on Mrs. Turner and tell me, or Sergeant Hatch here," the Inspector decided, walking down the ramp.

"They're all yours again, Mr. Linwood. Go on with your practicing and stomping. You come along with me, Mrs. Turner. You too, Sheriff."

Outside the theatre the Inspector and the Sheriff held a brief council of war, so low-voiced I didn't catch a word. Then the Sheriff departed and Inspector Pettengill turned to me.

"Bunch of good-lookers. Both girls and men," he approved. "Hate to think of one of them fine six-footers is a murderer. Too bad he had such a good aim with his foot. That pooh of yours would make a fine witness. Come on, let's pay him a visit."

A couple of miles down the road the Inspector stopped his car at an open spot.

"Good place for a talk. Nice view, and no chance anyone creeping up and eavesdropping," he commented before starting to think out loud. "Yes, ma'am, Mrs. Turner! If that little dog Stray could talk, I'd have the handcuffs on our murderer now—from what you been telling me. The way that pup acted—running along the downstairs hall in that old inn; smelled his friend Mack, that's why. And growling, and later on, howling. Knew old Mack been killed, and by whom. Smelled the murderer—the man you seen get out the window—on that stage and made a rush for him."

And You say you "Can't Afford" an Extra War Bond?

THEY say that after a while we become callous to death and suffering.

They say that in wartime people cannot understand the little heartaches and tragedies that touch individual lives. For when death and destruction occur on a mass scale, what happened to this one American soldier may not mean so much to you.

But to his parents and to a girl back home, his death means the end of everything.

It means the end of his dreams of a happy home, a family, a future . . .

Think of this boy for just a moment, please. Think of him . . . of his family . . . of what might have been?

Can you, in all decency, say that you "can't afford" an extra War Bond? We know you'll come through—as you have in every other War Loan Drive—and INVEST IN AT LEAST ONE EXTRA HUNDRED DOLLAR BOND today. That's the least you can do. You should do more, if you can. Invest $200, $300, $400—as much as possible. Remember, a hundred dollar Series E War Bond costs only seventy-five dollars. You get back $4.00 at maturity for every $3.00 you put up.

Get that extra hundred dollar Bond today at your bank. Or tell your employer to take it out of your salary. Help the company you work for to meet its quota.

Build Your Future With The World's Safest Investment

All over the country men and women look to the future with confidence. They are the ones who have put part of their extra wartime earnings into the world's safest investment—U. S. Government War Bonds.

Yes, they are helping their country in its grimmest struggle. But they are helping themselves, too! They are helping to secure their future, to weather any troubled days that may lie ahead.

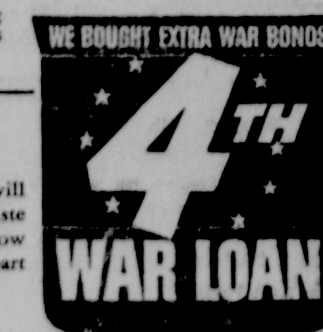

What about you? Are you letting the dollars slip through your fingers —dollars that should be put safely away in War Bonds?

There are War Bonds to fit your needs . . . Bonds which are backed up by the strongest "company" in the world. Build that home you have always dreamed about. Send your child to college. Buy the wonderful things that are coming after the war. YOU CAN DO IT WITH YOUR WAR BOND SAVINGS.

Display Your Colors

Every patriotic home in America will want to display this emblem. Paste it on your front door or on a window to show that you have done your part in the 4th War Loan.

Salem Quakers Defeat Girard Tuesday Night 40 To 25

BROWNMEN SCORE FROM ALL ZONES TO UPSET HOSTS

Scoring Honors Almost Equally Divided; Canton Lincoln Next Foe

Showing offensive power from all five positions, the Salem Quakers had an easy time last night in their visit to Girard, where they downed the Indians 40-25 in a listless game that wasn't in doubt at any time.

The Quakers, led by Frank Entriiken and Mutt Schaeffer, took the lead from the Indians early in the first quarter and never relinquished it. The score at the close of the first stanza stood 8-5, and the Quakers boosted their advantage to 20-14 by half-time. In the third period Salem outscored the Indians again and ran their lead to 10 points. It was 31-21 at the final period started.

In the last chapter of the fray, Salem turned on offensive powers that netted nine points while they held the out-maneuvered five to just two field goals. In the final Coach Brown used his entire squad — Don Firth, Lowell Myers, Bill Stoudt, Leonard Sobek and Norman Smith, all crashing the lineup.

From the opening jump until half way in the first stanza it looked as though it might be a close ball game. The Girard zone defense presented a serious obstacle for the Quakers for that length of time, but soon the Quakers broke through the Girard wall and began scoring with comparative ease. The Indians didn't tally a field goal until the last five seconds of the initial stanza.

Entriiken Gets 11 Points. Flick Entriiken was in good form, getting 11 points to lead the scoring and performing well from his forward spot. The lone senior on the squad seems to have found his shooting spot—well out on the right side of the court. Entriiken got three nice baskets from that position and two others from under the hoop.

Mutt Schaeffer continued his improved playing and got nine points. The newly developed scoring threat for Salem did some exceptional ball handling and proved his ability on a one handed side shot from his corner of the floor.

To round out Salem's well balanced attack last night came Brian and Appedisan with seven and six points respectively. Brian was well covered by the Girard zone men dropping off to cover him from both sides throughout the battle. Appedisan was ejected on fouls in the fourth quarter. The aggressive guard turned in a good job and as usual was troublesome to opposing ball handlers.

Laaney didn't play the entire game, being taken out in the second and fourth quarters for Bill Stoudt, who turned in some fine ball handling in his short stay in the game.

Canton Here Friday. Most encouraging fact in the Salem game was the all around scoring that showed up, thereby relieving Brian of the burden he has borne so well all year. Brown's plans all season have been to develop scoring power from all angles so that game can still be won if Brian should be bottled up.

The Quakers return to their home floor Friday night when the Canton Lincoln Lions come to Salem seeking their second win of the year over Salem. They downed the locals 43-25 two weeks ago in Canton.

QUAKER RESERVES HALT GIRARD, 30-24

Fighting an uphill battle all the way, Salem's reserves chalked up another win last night, at the expense of the Girard Indians, 30-24.

Trailing 8-5 at the end of the first quarter and 14-12 at halftime, the Salemites boosted their firepower in the final to pass and stay in front of the faltering Indians. Salem was led to victory by Lawrence Hollinger, rangy Sophomore, who dumped in six of his eight points in the last stanza. Leonard Sobek also collected eight points for the Quakers.

'Bum Dope' Coffman Keeps Sailors 'Rumor-Happy' At Sea

Editor's note: Life on an aircraft carrier at sea during wartime is not all battle action, there's gossip, too, or scuttle butt, as the Navy calls it. Richard G. Harris, United Press war correspondent, reports after a 45-day cruise.

By RICHARD G. HARRIS
United Press War Correspondent

ABOARD A U. S. ESCORT AIRCRAFT CARRIER, Atlantic Area—A ship the size of this is like a village populated solely by gossip old ladies constantly embroidering facts with the oldest fantasy.

The Navy name for rumor-mongering is scuttle butt, derived from the term for water cask or drinking fountain, where sailors meet and linger to talk.

Scuttle butt flourishes not only at the drinking fountain, however; it goes on in the crew's mess, at work in the officers' wardroom, in the head (washroom), between adjoining sacks (beds), all day, all night, all over the ship. It is the endless pleasure of news-hungry, often-bored men who go to sea.

Nor is its subject matter confined to a single ship. It can spread through an entire convoy. On this ship, for instance, word was received that one of the destroyers of a sister carrier, several hundred miles away, had been sent to the bottom by two submarines. The story went the rounds and by next day it had been revised—the destroyer had sunk two submarines.

A few days ago the Navy department announced, and the ship's newspaper published, the story of the sinking of the destroyer. On sea, as on land, it took a newspaper to establish truth.

Columbus Boy Expert

Scuttle butt expert aboard this ship is a round-faced, glib yeoman second class, Walter Scott Coffman, 30, who followed the women's ready-to-wear trade as a business and politics as a hobby before leaving his home at 1083 Hunter ave., Columbus, O., to join the Navy. Here, he is called "Bum Dope" Coffman.

At the beginning of this trip he started a story that the task unit was rushing over certain papers and documents urgently needed by President Roosevelt at the Cairo and Tehran conferences. It went over pretty well, but "Bum Dope" says the best story he ever had was during the last return trip home, when sailors began to get "channel fever" anticipating shore leaves.

The Navy department had decided, so the story went, to convert the ship to twin screw, and in order to do so she would have to be lengthened by 40 feet. This would necessitate her going into dry dock, where she would be cut in half and plates inserted amidship. The job was to take at least three months, therefore the entire crew would get long leaves.

"They believe only what they want to believe," grinned "Bum Dope."

Some Nane Believe

"Some of these amateurs tried to spread a story that we were going to refuel over on this side and keep right on hunting submarines without going home. That story got nowhere. Nobody wanted to believe it."

"Once, we were returning from a long trip and I happened to see the ship secretary's office cutting stencils for the forms used in making application for leaves. Well, they had run low on that kind of form and had just decided to make up some more while things were slow and they had the time."

"I told a few guys leave stencils were being cut—which was the truth—but the first thing you know it was all over the ship that if you wanted leave, you'd better make application for it, they were getting the forms ready."

"Guys began dropping by to make application. It nearly drove the ship's secretary nuts."

A man versed in politics and who can talk, Coffman said, can be fairly comfortable in the Navy. It was no great feat, for instance, to talk the galley out of a slab of pie.

On What's Going On In Capital

(By Associated Press)

WASHINGTON, Feb. 9.—With many political observers convinced President Roosevelt will seek a fourth term, interest shifted today to the vice presidency. The feeling among some forward-looking politicians is that if Mr. Roosevelt is elected, the man who served with him will be the No. 1 candidate for the presidency in 1948.

The importance which politicians are attaching to this belief is emphasized by an early move to obtain convention pledges for Speaker of the House Sam Rayburn.

Asked about Vice President Wallace's speeches in the west, which have been interpreted in some quarters as political, at his news conference yesterday, Mr. Roosevelt referred his questioners to the Sermon on the Mount. Is that political or not, the President asked. His questioners began studying with renewed interest the passage: "Ask and it shall be given you; seek and ye shall find."

The War Food administration (WFA) and some consumer and trade groups are in dispute over a 20,000,000-pound "bank reserve" of butter. The WFA wants it held for possible emergency needs. The consumer and trade groups want it released to civilians now. WFA says if the butter were to be released, civilian supplies during the coming production season would be that much shorter.

TAXES

Chairman George (D., Ga.) of the Senate finance committee proposed work be begun immediately to simplify tax forms. Under one plan, says George, 30,000,000 of the nation's 50,000,000 taxpayers could be relieved of filing returns at all. All their taxes would be deducted from their wages and salaries.

The University of San Francisco was founded in 1855 as the St. Ignace Church and College.

Tot Missing After Old Mine Cavein In Pennsylvania Town

(By Associated Press)

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Feb. 9.—The earth split open and swallowed a three-year-old child here yesterday, and grim miners still dug today in search of her body.

The child, Julie Ann Fulmer, daughter of a Navy enlisted man, was buried alive in a cavein over an abandoned anthracite mine.

Her aunt, Mrs. Marie Mitchell, on the verge of hysteria, told this story of the tragedy:

She and Julie Ann and the child's five-year-old brother, David, were walking along the sidewalk in a residential street after shopping at a grocery store.

Mrs. Mitchell peeled a tangerine and handed it to Julie Ann, and the child fell back a few steps.

"Then the earth cracked. "I leaped back, pulling Julie with one hand and knocking David back with the other," Mrs. Mitchell said.

"But the rush of earth tore Julie from me. There was nothing I could do to save her. She just disappeared."

The tangerine, thrown from Julie's hand, rolled down the sidewalk—the only evidence that the girl had stood there a second before.

Virtually all of this mining city of 18,000 is underlain by coal workings. During the last several years there have been many caveins, wrecking many homes and buildings. The caveins, or subsidences, occur when rotting mine timbers suddenly give away.

After Julie Ann disappeared, miners, attracted by Mrs. Mitchell's screams, scanned the yawning hole—40 feet deep and 10 feet across—and began digging. The work went forward under flood lights during the night while thousands watched. They worked in relays, suspended in the deep hole by ropes, and passing up the dirt bucket by bucket.

Medium bombers, besides hammering Cisterna, bombed the rail yards at Siena north of Rome.

Allied warships also joined in the assault, bombarding Formia.

In one sector west of Cisterna, American and German parallel formations attacked simultaneously yesterday in the general confusion. Bayonet fighting between rival patrols was reported from another sector.

At one strategic crossroad called "Femina Morta" (dead woman) the Germans occupy houses on one side of the road, and the Americans are in houses on the other side.

Principal B. G. Ludwig emphasized the fact that the school is making a genuine effort to build character and good citizenship in the students and made a plea to the parents for understanding and cooperation, particularly in the unnecessary absence from school.

In a summarization, Supt. Kerr called attention to the fact that while delinquency is not rampant in Salem there still are some problems to solve. He asked parents to return to the old practice of requiring certain duties of children in the home and placing responsibility on them at an early age. This sense of responsibility, according to Mr. Kerr, is one of the greatest builders of good citizenship.

Approximately 65,000 student nurses must be recruited within the next six months to meet minimum requirements of the armed forces.

They worked in relays, suspended in the deep hole by ropes, and passing up the dirt bucket by bucket.

Turning to milk and poultry prospects, Secrest said a decrease was certain because "we have about 10 per cent less feed in the state and 10 per cent more consuming units, cows, chickens, hogs and beef stock." He explained that dairy and poultry products required high protein concentrates which he said were scarce.

The government's "uncertainty in price policy has caused a sharp curtailment in feeder activity this fall and a reduction in breeding stock, he added, saying, "there are fewer beef cattle in Ohio feeding pens this year than any year since the war began and hog men have sharply curtailed their breeding sows. We will have less meat stock in 1944."

Ultimate Goal—Chinese Bases

"It is a great pleasure that we did it with such small losses (286 American dead—8,122 Japanese)."

Japanese plane strength, particularly naval air power, obviously is considerably under its peak.

The enemy lacks destroyers "to escort their supply convoys or to make up an adequate battle fleet."

However, Admiral Nimitz firmly believes Japan cannot be defeated from the sea alone and said his objective is "to get our ground and air forces into China as early as possible."

To correspondents he remarked "the Japs can only be defeated from bases in China" and, although giving no indication of such an offensive time table, added: "I think that if you'll watch the communiques, you'll see us moving on."

shows how anxious Hitler is to have onto Italy as long as possible, in for no other reason than to prevent the Allies from using the peninsula as a base for invading the Balkans across the Adriatic.

Why didn't the Allies drive deep into the higher ground away from the sea-front in the early stages of the invasion? There may be several answers to that, but it seems to me that one of them certainly is that an attacking force can't advance without supplies—and it might have to get equipment and other supplies, especially the heavy stuff, ashore from barges onto beach.

Why, the Allies haven't had a harbor of pin-head worth for a whole beachhead. They took a chance. That alone would seem to demonstrate that our high command didn't intend the operation to be more than diversionary.

Once the battle of the beachhead is over, however, the Allies presumably will move inland and go astride the railway and the Appennine way upon which the Hitlerite has the line to the south mainly depends for supplies. Thus the amphibious force will be a great menace to the German rear.
